Since our last report of the market, another rise of five cents has taken place, and we alter our quotations accordingly-to $1.40 for red, and $1.50 for white. It must be understood that these are the outside prices for strictly

We would not have our friends misled by the recent advances, and therefore hold for still much larger prices. They must not forget the history of the wheat market of last year-how that, opening at $1.65 to $1.75, it gradually declined until it reached $1.25 to $1.35-at or about which price it ruled for several months prior to the 1st inst.

The price in Richmond now is as high as in any other market in the country.
The last arrivals from Liverpool show a slight decline in both wheat and flour. Most of our exchanges report short crops, and had yields in quantity and quality, and yet many report a fair average. In making a calculation as to the probabilities of future prices, our readers must take into consideration the fact that it is the interest of the producer that the impression should prevail that the crop is short and the quality interior; again, that farmers are proverbial for looking on the unfavorable side of the weather, and without intending to deceive, they are apt to understate; and, yet, again, that there is a large surplus of old wheat in the West and Northwest, held by speculators, who do not scraple to manufacture "tremendous loss of crops, for the purpose of running up prices antil they sell. On the other hand, it is the interest of another class of speculators to make opposite statements; but as far as we can learn, there are not many persons speculating as yet, and millers are not much disposed to accumulate large stocks. A panic evidently prevails upon the subject. We have no doubt that immense damage has been done, by flood and the usual enemies of wheat, but still we think there will be a larger and better yield in the country at large than is generally anticipated. By the 1st of October we will know the result of the growing corn throughout the country for which the weather as been tavorable, the result of the European city. arrest, and will be better informed as to the resalt of our own harvest. These will influence sinces very greatly for the balance of the year. In the meantime, we repeat what we said in our issue of the 16th, that it is better to sell when the produce is ready for a fully open market; adding however, that, at this particular me, holders of strictly prime wheat would gain nothing by unnecessary haste. A sale now at $1 50 is equivalent to a sale at $1.65 to $1.70 weight, and interest, to say nothing of risk by ire and theit .- Richwood Enquirer, July 30th.

FRATRICIDE.-Hardly six months have was brought before and committed for fur-Thursday. The principal points in the eviprisoner, while passing through his brother's farm, met the deceased, when an altercation took place, which they went out into the road to settle by a a fisticuff. When they had gotten into the road, the deceased told his brother to put down the gun which he carried on his shoulder, (having been bunting) and have it out fair, at the same time using many abusive epithets; this the prisoner refused to do, and his brother turned as if to leave .-Here the testimony of the two principal witnesses conflicted somewhat. One, Geo. W. Greavor, testifying that the prisoner called after his brother, saying something to the effect that he had "violated his contracts," when the deceased turned, picked up a stone, and ran at him, saving;--"I'll see The other, your brains in ten minutes." Wm. G. Miller, test fies that when the deceased turned to go, his brother called after him and said, "Go on, you are no more than a blamed rascal, any how," and his brother wheeled, took up a stone and ran at the prisoner, saying, "If you say that again, I'll knock your brains out." Both agree that when he approached with the rock, Davidson Geerbart struck his brother a blow across the temple which nearly knocked him down, and when the deceased was in the act of rising, gave him another blow on the left side of his head, just behind the ear. Either blow the Doctor testifies would have been fatal. The prisoner was committed by the Court for fur-
